DR. PHILIP R. DAY, JR., CHANCELLOR
The winds of change are sweeping through the world. These sentiments are shared by virtually every business and education leader in the country as they address major challenges of competition and new, higher standards of excellence, and increased emphases on accountability and performance.

City College of San Francisco continues to keep up with this ever-faster pace of change and challenge. The Strategic Plan for CCSF is a road map of goals and objectives and strategies for the new millennium. In the coming years, we may well be expected to accomplish more with less. Our plan is therefore ambitious, seeking to achieve as much growth and development as possible, yet tempered by the reality of available resources.

Our strategic plan was adopted by the Board of Trustees in December 1997 after almost two years of hard work by faculty, administrators, students and staff. When I arrived at the College in September 1998, the Board asked me to revisit the plan to ensure that it is up-to-date and current with the needs of our diverse communities in San Francisco.

Recognizing that our Strategic Plan is a living document that needs to be continually shaped and adjusted, I initiated a series of listening sessions to hear from representatives of business, industry, government and community organizations about their concerns and ideas for how CCSF should address the educational needs of our constituencies. After three months of planning, and three months of holding listening sessions at eight of our campuses, we have compiled this report that provides the College with the critical ideas and proposals from nearly 300 representatives from a diverse array of organizations.

The information contained in this report will be integrated into the college’s Strategic Plan and action plans will be developed to ensure that the proposals and ideas coming out of the listening sessions are implemented in the near future.

I want to thank all the participants for their time and effort in making these listening sessions so productive and important for City College.

Dr. Philip R. Day, Jr.
Chancellor

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

This report summarizes the observations, ideas and proposals of nearly 250 representatives of community organizations, businesses, trade associations, non-profit agencies, government and educational institutions including current students and alumni about what the College might do to prepare for and face a number of important challenges in the next decade. The information in this report will be reviewed by the College’s Planning and Budgeting Council for purposes of updating and modifying the College’s Strategic Plan.

Presenters at the College’s eight listening sessions focused on seven major themes:

Expand Marketing and College Outreach Activities
Speakers urged the college to increase its visibility by using prominent signs; regular advertisements in community newspapers and college contacts at each campus. Much of the emphasis on visibility was directed toward promoting and expanding outreach activities particularly to diverse and hard-to-reach constituencies throughout the College service area as well as to all students in the SFUSD schools.

Promote Access to College Programs
Many presenters wanted CCSF to increase the effectiveness of enrollment, financial aid and testing services for students entering the College. They also urged an increase in high-demand classes as well as hours of college services and strengthening counseling services.

Expand Flexible Delivery of Services
A recurring theme throughout the sessions was the importance of delivering educational services that meet the needs of students with non-traditional schedules. Among the many ideas were expansion of distance learning programs; more short-term classes and dividing long-term courses into a series of course modules. They also urged the College to consider weekend courses and extended evening classes. Support services, especially childcare and counseling services, need to be extended to help students enrolled in weekend, evening and other non-traditional times.

Continue and/or Expand Current Programs
Presenters appreciate City College programs. They spoke highly of many of the current programs and urged that they be continued and some of them expanded. Programs that should be expanded including English as a Second Language and other immigrant educational programs; basic skills; general education; concurrent enrollment classes with high school students; child development/parent programs; Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Studies.
Expand Workforce and Economic Development Initiatives
A central thread throughout the listening sessions was the importance of CCSF as a source of education and training for the San Francisco workforce. The College needs to address the training and education needs of incumbent workers, displaced workers, welfare recipients and workers needing to upgrade their skills. Speakers proposed the expansion of industry-specific training programs, such as multi-media and health; continuation of work with City agencies and community organizations on welfare to work programs; training programs for city workers; expansion of vocational ESL classes; and the use of distance education delivery systems for workforce training.

Support Out-of-Classroom Learning Activities
There is a growing recognition of the importance of out-of-classroom learning activities as a mechanism for students to combine hands-on experiences with classroom instruction. Among the activities that speakers addressed were the increased opportunities for service learning; the expansion of internships; expansion of tutoring programs; and mentoring opportunities for students.

Expand Partnerships and Collaborations
Many speakers extended their appreciation to the College for inviting them to speak at a CCSF Listening Session. They also indicated their interest in developing partnerships and collaborations with the College including initiatives with business and industry; the San Francisco Unified School District; post-secondary institutions in the region; City and County government; and community-based organizations.
OVERVIEW OF LISTENING SESSIONS

During the months of December 1998 through February 1999, City College of San Francisco invited representatives from many different sectors of San Francisco to present their ideas of what City College should be doing to serve the needs of the people of San Francisco in the next five to ten years. The invitees, almost 250 of them, came prepared with their ideas, suggestions and thoughts to share with a panel of City College “listeners,” faculty, classified, staff, administrators, current students and members of the Board of Trustees. The Chancellor chaired all eight sessions.

The eight listening sessions were held in or near the campuses of City College. Speakers were organized into panels, most of which had a special focus such as “Perspectives from the Media” or “Views from Community Organizations.” Each speaker was invited to take five to seven minutes to present ideas, thoughts and/or proposals to a panel of City College listeners. To help focus the presentations, each invitee was sent a paper entitled “City College of San Francisco: New Challenges, New Opportunities,” which identified some critical issues and some important questions facing the college. The central question asked was: What key directions should CCSF undertake in planning its future?

Among the questions that speakers were asked to address were the following:

- Student Success—How can CCSF best prepare for, and help students achieve, the changing educational goals of the next century?

- Access—How can the College ensure access to all San Franciscans and expand educational opportunities?

- Programs—What strategies can City College use to provide diverse programs and educational services within the constraints of a tightened budget?

- Technology—What strategies might CCSF employ to embrace new technologies and develop partnerships that will benefit student learning?

- Facilities—How can City College best improve its educational facilities?

- Funding—What sources of revenue might be developed to help City College deal with increasing enrollments and limited State funding?

- Other Challenges—What other issues might CCSF face in the coming years, and how might the institution best address them?
The City College listeners heard a large number of ideas, suggestions and proposals from the invited speakers, which is summarized both in Executive Summary and the Major Findings sections of this report.

Most speakers complemented the College for organizing the listening sessions and asking for input from the people of San Francisco. For many of the speakers, this was the first time that any institution had asked for their views and ideas.

Speakers also articulated a great deal of respect and gratitude to the College for its fine educational programs and the excellence of its faculty, administrators and staff. Many, in fact, expressed a strong interest in developing collaborations or partnerships with specific programs within the College, or proposed deepening and expanding already-existing partnerships.

The listening sessions heard from a total of 247 speakers during the three month period (names and organizations are listed in the back of this report). The following table provides a demographic profile of the speakers:

Among the 247 speakers there were 14 CCSF alumni, 26 current CCSF students, 47 business-people, 100 representatives from community organizations, 42 educators, 12 representatives from lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender organizations; 7 representatives from public/government agencies and 11 from workforce training/human resource organizations.

A complete listing of the presenters at each of the listening sessions is included in Appendix A.

During the Fall semester, the College Planning and Budgeting Council and other college organizations will review the findings in this report, and use them to update the College’s Strategic Plan. Many of the ideas and suggestions listed in this report are already being implemented by the College; others will be addressed in the near future.
MAJOR FINDINGS FROM COLLEGE LISTENING SESSIONS

Overview
During a three month period, December 1998 through February 1999, City College held eight listening sessions in which 247 representatives of the City, business, communities, other educational institutions, non-profit agencies and religious institutions presented their ideas for what City College should be doing to meet the needs of the residents of San Francisco.

The presenters came prepared with their ideas, some of them discussing four or five proposals with the City College panelists. Consequently, listening session note-takers recorded close to 1000 ideas, suggestions, proposals and concerns for the college to review and consider. To organize this prodigious amount of data, we coded each recorded statement and then sorted them into general categories within each listening session. On a second sort, we matched and collected the coded statements from all listening sessions. The coded statements organized across all the listening sessions gave a general picture of what the presenters’ were focusing upon.

The second sort of coded statements revealed seven major areas of concern among the invited presenters. What follows is a list of major findings from the listening sessions organized by the seven themes and a summary of the major proposals in each area:

I. EXPAND MARKETING AND COLLEGE OUTREACH ACTIVITIES
Presenters at every listening session emphasized the importance of ensuring that the public continues to know more about the College and its programs.

- Increase public visibility
  Many presenters both from the business sector and community organizations noted that the College needed more visibility among the general public. They spoke of the needs for prominent signs on college buildings; regular advertisements in especially community newspapers; and a contact person at each campus who could steer people to the appropriate program or person.

- Promote the College in diverse communities
  While most presenters praised the college for its commitment to meeting the needs of the residents of SF, many felt that the College had to do a better job of making itself known in the communities that are proximate to the college campuses. To market the college to these communities, languages other than English should be used, where appropriate.

- Promote specific College programs
  While some presenters spoke about marketing the College to a general audience, many of the presenters emphasized the importance of addressing specific education and training needs. Therefore, they focused their remarks on college marketing strategies that would provide information about specific college programs. Among the many programs mentioned were English as a Second Language, Health-related occupational programs, programs targeted to special populations such DSPS, Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Studies, or populations needing training and education in areas such as the hospitality industry or the technology-related industries.

- Expand outreach to all students in the SFUSD schools

Many presenters emphasized the importance of being more aggressive in outreach efforts to students in the SF public schools through face-to-face meetings as well as publications. Presenters also suggested using administrators, faculty, staff and students to introduce the College to prospective students.

II. ACCESS TO THE COLLEGE AND TO COLLEGE PROGRAMS

Many presenters voiced concern over problems of gaining access to information about and entry into various College programs. They urged CCSF to focus on ways to improve access for current and future students seeking to enroll at the College.

- Increase the effectiveness of enrollment, financial aid and testing services

Services including admissions, records, registration, testing, and financial aid were noted by many speakers as key first contacts for new and continuing students, and that these services should be oriented toward helping students get through the College processes as efficiently and quickly as possible.

- Increase access to high-demand classes

Current and former students spoke about the need to increase the number of class sections especially of high demand classes in ESL, Mathematics, English and computers.

- Increase the hours of college services

College services including the bookstore, libraries and classes need to be accessible to all students, especially in the evenings and weekends. Some presenters wanted classes to begin as early as 6 a.m.

- Strengthen counseling services

The need for strengthening counseling services was noted by some speakers, including providing expanded information for students, increasing the availability of counselors during evenings and weekends and providing more professional development opportunities for the counseling staff.

III. FLEXIBLE DELIVERY OF SERVICES

A recurring theme throughout all the listening sessions was the importance of developing educational delivery services that meet the needs of students. The core of this view was the need for flexibility in delivering instruction and student and administrative services. But it also included expansion of needed student support services.
• Align College services with workforce needs
Many representatives from business, government, and the non-profit sector emphasized the importance of aligning College services including enrollment, instruction and student/academic support services with the needs of various sectors of the workforce including those needing retraining and upgrading. The task, they noted, requires adapting instructional curriculum, establishing new ways of enrolling, registering and advising students and providing them with academic support.

• Expand distance education opportunities
Distance education including the expansion of the College’s current offerings of telecourses and the establishment of on-line courses were important concerns for many presenters from business and industry.

• Expand short-term classes
CCSF’s short term classes need to be expanded to accommodate the needs of workers who need specific skill training in a short period of time.

• Use more course modules
To enable some students who need multiple skill competencies, presenters urged that the College introduce more courses with specific skill modules.

• Expand weekend courses/programs
Use of weekend courses and programs to promote maximum scheduling flexibility was proposed by many presenters.

• Extend evening classes
To promote flexible scheduling, presenters frequently mentioned extending the number and time of the College’s evening schedule.

• Expand childcare services
Childcare services need to be expanded to include more slots for children, care for infants, and extended evening hours.

• Expand counseling services
Increase the hours and availability of counselors for the transfer center; career center and general counseling.

IV. CONTINUE AND/OR EXPAND CURRENT PROGRAMS

• Continue/Expand ESL and immigrant educational programs
Presenters at every listening session urged the college to either continue or expand its offerings in ESL and other immigrant educational programming.

• Expand general education programs
Many speakers urged the College to expand specific programs such as courses that focus on critical thinking, writing and communications.
Expand programs for special populations
Among the proposals were ideas for the expansion of Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Studies; retention programs for at-risk high school students; support programs for disabled students.

Expand basic skills courses
The College should expand basic skills classes, especially in English and Mathematics.

Expand concurrent enrollment classes for high school students
School administrators and business leaders both agreed that the concurrent enrollment programs should be expanded for high school students because these programs provided students with excellent opportunities to learn and earn college credit at the same time.

Establish more program articulation agreements with high schools
School administrators also proposed more program articulation agreements that link SFUSD high schools with CCSF programs. They cited Tech/Prep and School to Career programs as models.

Expand child development/parenting programs to more campuses
Child development and parenting received a great deal of attention by speakers who urged the college to expand offerings and cites where classes could be offered.

V. EXPAND WORKFORCE AND ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT INITIATIVES
A central thread throughout all the listening sessions was the need for additional attention to workforce training, specifically the College needs to address the training and education needs of the incumbent workforce, the displaced workers, people receiving welfare and those workers who need to upgrade their skills.

Expand industry-specific training programs
The College should continue to develop training programs targeting specific industries such as finance, broadcast media, multi-media, and health.

Continue to work with City agencies and community organizations on welfare to work programs
Presenters urged the College to continue and even expand its working relationships with City agencies and community organizations to support welfare-to-work programs.

Provide workforce training for City and County departments
Administrators of many City and County agencies indicated that they would welcome joint agreements with CCSF to supply specific training to their employees.

Expand Vocational ESL classes
Expand English as a Second Language classes linked to specific vocational/technical programs to ensure that students learn a full range of English and communications skills related to the specific career program or class.
• Utilize distance education delivery systems for workforce training
  Use both on-line courses and telecourses to provide workforce training to workers who cannot attend traditional classes.

VI. SUPPORT OUT-OF-CLASSROOM LEARNING ACTIVITIES
There is a growing recognition of the importance of out-of-classroom learning activities as a mechanism for students to combine hands-on experiences with what they have been learning in the classroom. Many of the listening session presenters urged the College to continue and/or expand these opportunities for students.

• Increase opportunities for service learning
  Expand the number of service projects linked to courses and classes so that students can obtain academic credit for service-learning activities. Increase the linkages with community service projects located near CCSF campuses.

• Expand internship opportunities
  Increase the number and types of internships for CCSF students

• Expand tutoring programs
  Utilize College students as tutors for community-sponsored projects such as those in the OMI, and for school site including elementary, middle and high schools.

• Provide mentoring opportunities for students
  Utilize volunteers from business, industry, performing arts, professions and alumni to act as mentors for CCSF students.

VII. EXPAND PARTNERSHIPS AND COLLABORATIONS
The listening sessions confirmed that all sectors of San Francisco are interested in developing partnerships and collaborations with City College.

• Continue to develop partnerships with business and industry
  Increase partnerships with business and industry to address the workforce training and education needs including the needs of small and medium-size businesses

• Expand collaboration with the San Francisco Unified School District
  Members of the Board of Education and SFUSD senior administrators indicated a strong desire to expand collaborative projects with CCSF.

• Expand collaboration with other post-secondary institutions
  Three major universities in the region spoke to the CCSF listening sessions, all reaffirming their interest in deepening their collaboration with City College. CCSF should expand and develop its partnerships with institutions of higher education throughout the region, and where possible with institutions outside the Bay Area (such as Historically Black Colleges).

• Expand collaboration with City and county government
  Representatives from all parts of the City and County of San Francisco indicated a strong interest in developing collaboratives with CCSF.

• Expand relations with community-based organizations
The College should expand its collaborations with community organizations especially in the area of workforce training and education.
