

Dear Community,

City College of San Francisco is kicking off its Facilities Master Planning (FMP) process, which will provide a strategy for facilities improvement, renovation, replacement, and construction over the next 10 years. Modernizing current facilities and analyzing how they meet the community's needs will result in a 21st century college campus that serves students and faculty well into the future. And with multiple campuses and locations around the city, it is crucial for the college to develop a structured, needs-based plan to ensure facilities needs are met appropriately.

The FMP process will be guided by an advisory committee made up of faculty, administrative officials and students. This group will analyze existing facilities, identify needs, develop a series of options, and make a final recommendation.

Participation by the public – both the CCSF college community and San Francisco residents – is absolutely crucial for this process to succeed. In early May, the advisory committee will circulate a survey to the CCSF community via e-mail that solicits feedback on the most important campus needs.

Based on these results, the workgroup will develop a variety of site plan options for each of the city's 8 campuses which it will present in a series of public workshops. After analyzing the feedback from these workshops, the advisory committee will develop a comprehensive recommended Facilities Master Plan. This will be widely circulated for public feedback, and an additional round of public meetings will be held. After this last round of comments, the advisory committee will present the recommended master plan to the Board of Trustees.

Again, to ensure that the Facilities Master Planning results in a campus that meets the most pressing needs of our city, we encourage the public to be active participants throughout this process.
