Starting a search with OneSearch

Search print and online books and videos, articles, and more, all at once with the OneSearch tab, or choose a more limited tab.

The screenshot shows the OneSearch navigation bar with tabs for OneSearch, Articles, Books & Media, Course Reserves, and Research Guides. A search box contains the text "Search for books, eBooks, articles & more" and a "Search" button. Callouts provide details: "Course Reserves are textbooks kept at Circulation, and available for short periods of time" and "Research guides are created by CCSF librarians to help guide your research in a subject area."

Example of a RESULTS LIST from OneSearch, part 1

The top of the results list will show the number of results for your search, followed by reference articles that give you background and overview information, and then any related research guides that have been created by CCSF librarians.

The screenshot shows a search results page for "Academic Skills" with 5,725,549 results. Callouts explain: "The search terms and criteria that got these results are here." (pointing to the search bar), "Change sorting and other results options here." (pointing to Relevance and Page Options dropdowns), "Credo Reference articles provide overviews and main concepts. Other Topics that may be useful are also listed." (pointing to the Credo Reference article), "Research starters give you more background to get you started." (pointing to the Research Starter article), "These limiting options help reduce and focus your results." (pointing to the Limit To section), "Check here for print books only." (pointing to the Print Books checkbox), and "Look here for guides that may be helpful to your research." (pointing to the Recommended Research Guides section).

OneSearch RESULTS LIST, part 2

The rest of your search results, books, videos and articles, will be listed after the research guides.
