DESCRIPTION OF THE PROFESSION: Paramedics are emergency medical technicians (EMT’s) with additional advanced training to more thoroughly evaluate the clinical condition of patients and provide advanced life support care in the prehospital setting. As the highest level of emergency medical responder in EMS systems, paramedics respond to incidents as varied as motor vehicle collisions, heart attacks, drownings, childbirth, seizures, and gunshot wounds. Most commonly, paramedics provide this vital attention as they care for the patient on the scene and during transport to a medical facility. Paramedics work for various agencies such as private ambulance companies, fire departments, rural emergency departments, helicopters and other private industries, in full-time, part-time and volunteer capacities. Paramedic work is physically strenuous and mentally stressful, involving life or death situations and suffering patients. For a more thorough look at the profession and the occupational outlook, see the Bureau of Labor and Statistics website at www.bls.gov or the California EMS Authority website at www.emsa.ca.gov.
